RE: Proceeding 17-108

The freedom of the internet cannot be left to large corporations to determine how content is delivered to all internet users. It is the responsibility of the government to ensure that the internet remains unburdened of excessive regulation that can and will be imposed if laws are not setup to protect it in its original form. Corporations like Comcast and TWC are only interested in ensuring that they make more money by charging individuals and businesses more money in order to transfer their content to an end-user. Please, for the sake of the freedom of information. Do not allow laws to be created that will end net-neutrality. Protect this information network from the greedy corporations that only intend to strong arm smaller businesses and individuals into agreements that we can't afford to protest.

Sincerely,

Devan & Lynette Munn
